Councilor Sciarra seconded. This has been an ongoing conversation throughout the Commonwealth for several years and the petition has been attempted by other Massachusetts communities such as Lowell, Councilor Dwight related. Aaron Nelson's attempt in Ashfield was thwarted not all that long ago. The resolution was the brainchild of local teenagers participating in the Mayor's Youth Commission. The issue gained particular urgency around March 24th when residents saw one of the largest demonstrations in decades instigated, managed and presented by people 18 years old and younger. Councilor Dwight referred to the Vietnam War and the fact that some of its participants had no agency in the prosecution of that war. American citizens started to realize that maybe it was wrong that people who were considered adults in every other situation were being deprived of their suffrage. As a result, congress lowered the voting age to 18. Now they are talking about lowering it to 16. They are at the back end of an election that had remarkably low participation, Councilor Dwight pointed out. Here they have a cohort that's literally asking for the opportunity to participate. Responding to some of the arguments against lowering the voting age, he acknowledged that teenagers don't pay taxes but noted that this is not a qualifier to vote. In response to the argument that they aren't sophisticated enough, women and African Americans were unfairly denied suffrage for the same reason. The cynic in him wants to say that if intelligence or sophistication were the guideline he doesn't think they would have seen the consequence of the latest election. As far as the argument that they are too easily influenced, to qualify to vote individuals have to be 18, a U.S. Citizen and in some states not a felon. They have a cohort here that has the cognitive abilities to make decisions and who have the desire for agency. He thinks it is appropriate that they offer them the opportunity to experience what democracy is. He voiced the perception that, after March 24th, the energy statewide has shifted in favor of lowering the voting age. The gist of the resolution is that the City Council consider the request to sponsor a home rule petition. He expressed hope that legislators would be more receptive.

He had a conversation with the Mayor, City Solicitor and Council President in which they discussed that city officials are required by charter to regularly do a charter review, Councilor Dwight continued. Rather than throw this up, he thought they would combine this as a package with other charter changes. Another compelling reason not to rush into this is that Northampton presently has no representation in the senate. His hope is to come back at a more conducive time to draft a petition and ask the City Council to consider approving it and sending it on. The current resolution is simply to accept the request of the Youth Commission to consider this, he concluded.

Councilor O'Donnell said he appreciated Councilor Dwight's comments and agreed with everything he said. Councilor Dwight spoke eloquently about what they owe potential voters. He thinks it is also appropriate to talk about what potential voters could do for them.

He referred to the statutory deadline for registering to vote, which is 20 days prior to an election; that was challenged by a group that said it was arbitrary. The court threw out the case saying that the legislature could make its own rule. This decision shows that rules are not handed down by God but are for them to make. If the state extended the deadline for registering to vote they would have better outcomes and he thinks this proposal would have the same result. He thinks they absolutely do want to have democracy that extends to this particular age. He is proud that this is coming forward and that Northampton will join other towns in Massachusetts in pushing for it.

Councilor Bidwell said he also agrees with everything Councilor Dwight said. If they provide the opportunity for 16 and 17 year olds to be involved in the electoral process that's going to carry forward and enrich and rejuvenate their democracy. He asked if there are other communities in the Commonwealth besides Ashfield and Lowell that have advanced this to the legislature.

When Lowell first introduced the petition it was summarily rejected by Secretary Galvin who said it was neither feasible nor plausible, Councilor Dwight related. Ashfield tried again and its petition survived an initial screening but later dissipated.

"There's a wave that is cresting that we have an opportunity to ride here," he suggested. Referring to groups that try to gain the system by limiting people's ability to vote, he thinks expanding the vote is what they should be representing. He thinks there's the energy and there's the opportunity. If we combine forces we have a much better prospect of having this be realized, he proposed.

Councilor Klein said she is a huge supporter of this and is really excited to see it through and bring it to the state legislature. Unmarried women and people of color are being called the rising American electorate. If they bring 16 year olds into voting they are strengthening even more that rising American electorate that is the new face of the United States. It behooves us to support that rising electorate to come into its own and have a voice in this country. It is an exciting movement and one that she personally couldn't be happier about, she volunteered.

Councilor Nash thanked the Youth Commission once again. He thinks they come forward with something every year whether it be the plastic bags, painting the benches downtown, etc. "It's cool," he observed.

Councilor LaBarge thanked the Youth Commission and Councilor Dwight. With regard to the Vietnam War, she and husband talked about it last night. At that point, as soon as you got out of high school you were drafted. She has looked at their youth and it shows how vibrant their community is for youth. She said she doesn't see a difference between 16, 17 and 18-year old people.

They do work and they do pay taxes because taxes come out when they work, she pointed out. "It's time that we show our youth what democracy is like here in the city of Northampton and that we are very proud of them."

This generation is pretty much the only thing that gives her hope at this point in time, Councilor Sciarra shared. I would entrust more than just voting rights to them, she confided. They have shown themselves to be remarkable and thoughtful and not self-serving. She thinks it is fantastic. Watching them on March 24th, there was a 13-year old who spoke more eloquently and with more deft and critical thinking than anything she's ever heard in her life.

One of the strongest arguments to him is the two-word quote "why not?" Councilor Dwight added. He referred to a quote that 'states are laboratories of democracy for our country.' He sees no reason why cities and towns cannot be 'laboratories of democracy' for our state, he observed.

Councilor Dwight acknowledged Councilor O'Donnell for being the one that originally planted the seed in the Youth Commission for advocating for lowering the voting age. He made a cogent and compelling case that expanding the right to vote strengthens the democracy, he related.

Councilor O'Donnell called the motion to a vote, and it passed unanimously 9:0.

Councilor Bidwell asked what the net gain or loss of spaces is.

Mayor Narkewicz said it is definitely a net gain.

Councilor Nash said he did not have the figure but would get it for second reading. Planners added eight spaces at the entrance to Hockanum Road while spaces were eliminated on the easterly side of Pleasant near the bike shop.
